

John Auerbach, MBA, Director of Intergovernmental and Strategic Affairs, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC)

John Auerbach, MBA, is the director of Intergovernmental and Strategic Affairs at the CDC. In this role, Mr. Auerbach oversees a range of activities as lead strategic advisor on CDC engagement with government agencies at the federal, state, local, tribal, and territorial levels, public health partners, and other external partners. He is the main point of contact for HHS' Office of Intergovernmental and External Affairs (IEA) and the White House Office of Intergovernmental Affairs (IGA), coordinating requests and responses across the agency.

Mr. Auerbach most recently served as the president and CEO of Trust for America's Health (TFAH) where he oversaw TFAH's work to promote sound public health policy and make disease prevention a national priority. Over the course of a 30-year career, he has also held senior public health positions at the federal, state, and local levels. Additionally Mr. Auerbach was a professor of practice in health sciences and director of the Institute on Urban Health Research and Practice at Northeastern University. In his early career, he served as director of the largest Women, Infants and Children program at a community health center in Massachusetts.